Years ago I wrote on a piece of paper "Every billion dollars helps" and hung it over my desk. I had been creating software called NIPS (and, later LEADMiner and DARTTS) which would be used by dozens of governments to target trade based money laundering (TBML). But I was wrong. I should have written, "Every trillion dollars helps." Governments take notice. John Cassara's much needed, timely book, "Trade-Based Money Laundering: The Next Frontier in International Money Laundering Enforcement" describes accurately and in great detail how TBML is used to fund criminal enterprise while robbing nations of staggering amounts of revenue.

An insightful and eye-popping book about what may be the biggest global financial crime that nobody can see. TBML is conducted in plain sight but is so vast and multi-layered that it is incredibly difficult to identify. Written with the keen eye of experience from a career in federal intelligence and law enforcement, John Cassara's latest work will educate you with facts and keep you entertained with real-life anecdotes every step of the way.

Provides a great foundational understanding of an important topic. Provides lots of specific examples that help illustrate the concepts. TBML is certainly a growing menace and this book helps bankers, regulators and other interested parties come to grips with the issue.
